National Music Industry Review Report

Today the Music Industry Review into sexual harm, sexual harassment and systemic discrimination report, Raising Their Voices was released. The report's findings are drawn from consultation with over 1,600 people, including industry and victim survivors, and sets out important recommendations for change in the industry.

Live Performance Australia (LPA) acknowledges the findings released in the report.

LPA and the Executive Council will review the recommendations and consider what actions need to be taken to implement solutions for sustainable change. LPA is committed to working with its industry colleagues and our Members to ensure that our workplaces are safe, equal, diverse, inclusive and respectful.

The Music Industry Joint Statement Acknowledgement of Harm, of which LPA is a signatory, can be viewed here.

LPA reminds all Members that we developed an Industry Code, policy templates and resources in 2018, and ran 20 Respectful Workplaces Training sessions nationally over 18 months following release of the Code.

We encourage all Members to review current policies and practices and contact us if you require any assistance or advice.

We also encourage Members to read the report released today, reflect on your work environments, and provide feedback to us on where you feel LPA should focus future action in response to recommendations outlined in the report.
